B&B Corner

Greetings Lochmere!

Your Baron and Baroness have been busy over the last couple of months and now we've finally hit a stretch of events that we can feasibly day trip to. Please coordinate with Duchess Simone for hospitality at the events we intend to attend.

Pennsic is coming! We are doing our standard Pennsic projects getting ready for the big event. If you would like, you could come to the fighter practice site on Tuesdays and work on your projects together! We would love to see you out!

We have scheduled a picnic on the 13th of July so the Barony can have an opportunity to get together as a group that isn't tied to a SCA event. We are hoping that we can have a nice, relaxing day on the shore of the Severn river (Lady Bryn!). We would like to start around 10:30 am or so - and we have the site reserved for the entire day. So bring boardgames, bocce, bardic (if you wish) and have fun!

The address is Bieman's Point on Naval Support Activity Annapolis. (GPS COORDINATES: 38.987789, -76.474869). There aren't any requirements to show an ID on this part of the base - so getting on shouldn't be a problem. We have to warn you that while driving on base that you should strictly obey the speed limit - the Shore Police view speeding tickets as sport sometimes. Please don't bring anything that can be construed as a weapon - including but not limited to: archery, thrown weapons, rapier swords, armored fighting equipment, and I can't believe I have to say this - especially NO siege weapons! :)

Sarra and I are providing hot dogs and hamburger meat and we need others to bring buns, drinks, condiments, plates, plastic cutlery, and side dishes. We also recommend bringing enough chairs for whoever you are bringing with you - there are picnic tables under the hard pavilion but it doesn't hurt to be prepared. Please coordinate with either Sarra or myself on what you intend to bring. Look for further info - I plan on posting/emailing everyone with pictures to explain how to get there once you are on base.

Keep having fun! We are having a blast!

Cornacc and Sarra

Officer Spotlight—Chatelaine

Lord Angelo DiMarino at your Service. I am the Chatelaine of our wonderful Barony. I play Garbie Dolls with newcomers who don't have anything in the way of their own garb yet, and I act as the Welcome Wagon, inviting them to come and play with us. The purpose of a chatelaine is to make new comers to the SCA feel comfortable with the goings on at an event, introduce them to people, and see to them having a good time to keep coming back. Outside of the office of Chatelaine and the SCA, I work at a perennial Plant nursery as my mundane job, as well as an on cast at the Maryland Renaissance Festival doing spinning demonstrations for their living history program. My primary interests revolve around the fiber arts, especially spinning. It's a very zen experience, especially when working on the drop spindle.

Yours in Service,
Lord Angelo DiMarino

EXCHEQUER'S TIPS

Income categories always include Full Price, Member Discount, Youth with optional categories of Feast, Camping, and Merchant fees.

In order to decide what you will charge for site fee, you should know what the event is going to cost. The cost of the event is all your expenses, without feast, added together. If feast is not a separate option, then you must include it in the cost of the event. The expense section of the Event Budget lists the possible expenses.

Once you know what the event will cost, use your best estimate of how many people will attend. Your Exchequer should be able to provide previous years attendance. Remember there will be a mixture of adult and youth.

Divide the number of adults you expect by the total cost of the event to find your base event fee. Then round up to something that makes sense and helps you reach your target profit goal.

You must have enough attendees to cover the site fee and all expected expenses. You will have to juggle the site fee and expenses until you have the right mix.

Do the same with feast. Discuss the menu ideas with your cook and what it will cost per person. Decide how many people will stay for feast and multiply people by cost per person.

Approximately 2 weeks prior to the event ask the reservationist how many people have reserved for feast so you and the cook can adjust up or down accordingly. Normally, the cook does not shop until the week of the event so feast can be flexible.

Next Month: Who gets to attend an event on the Barony's dime and how does it get worked into the event budget?

At the recent Crown Tournament in Spiaggia Levantina I was amused and heartened to hear several performers, including His Highness Prince Cuan, sing from the modern musical Camelot. For many of us, the music of Camelot invokes old memories of our Society and it's inspiration in the original May Tourney. Lest we forget the muse that drew so many to this land of Atlantia I call upon you to seek out inspiration, whether it is our fair Queen Adelheit or a lord or lady of your choosing.

The Inspiration of the Queen

Guinevere is the wife of Arthur in the legends of Camelot and the Knights of the Round Table. She is both an inspirational figure and a classic deceiver, significant in some tales about the fall of Arthur. We still have no answer to the question of who the 'real' Arthur was but the legends have spawned numerous works and played a significant role in our own Society. Guinevere's story is reported in the Welsh Trioedd Ynys Prydein, Geoffrey of Monmouth's 12th c Historia Regum Britanniae, Chretien de Troyes' Lancelot and Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur. All of these contain references to the wife or Queen of Arthur. Seek out the original tales, they still tell stories that can inspire and perplex us. Below is a bit of Lancelot or The Knight of the Cart by Chretien de Troyes.

(Vv. 31-172.) Upon a certain Ascension Day King Arthur had come from Caerleon, and had held a very magnificent court at Camelot as was fitting on such a day. After the feast the King did not quit his noble companions, of whom there were many in the hall. The Queen was present, too, and with her many a courteous lady able to converse in French. And Kay, who had furnished the meal, was eating with the others who had served the food. While Kay was sitting there at meat, behold there came to court a knight, well equipped and fully armed, and thus the knight appeared before the King as he sat among his lords. He gave him no greeting, but spoke out thus: "King Arthur, I hold in captivity knights, ladies, and damsels who belong to thy dominion and household; but it is not because of any intention to restore them to thee that I make reference to them here; rather do I wish to proclaim and serve thee notice that thou hast not the strength or the resources to enable thee to secure them again. And be assured that thou shalt die before thou canst ever succour them." The King replies that he must needs endure what he has not the power to change; nevertheless, he is filled with grief. Then the knight makes as if to go away, and turns about, without tarrying longer before the King; but after reaching the door of the hall, he does not go down the stairs, but stops and speaks from there these words: "King, if in thy court there is a single knight in whom thou hast such confidence that thou wouldst dare to entrust to him the Queen that he might escort her after me out into the woods whither I am going, I will promise to await him there, and will surrender to thee all the prisoners whom I hold in exile in my country if he is able to defend the Queen and if he succeeds in bringing her back again." Many who were in the palace heard this challenge, and the whole court was in an uproar. Kay, too, heard the news as he sat at meat with those who served. Leaving the table, he came straight to the King, and as if greatly enraged, he began to say: "O King, I have served thee long, faithfully, and loyally; now I take my leave, and shall go away, having no desire to serve thee more." The King was grieved at what he heard, and as soon as he could, he thus replied to him: "Is this serious, or a joke?" And Kay replied: "O King, fair sire, I have no desire to jest, and I take my leave quite seriously. No other reward or wages do I wish in return for the service I have given you. My mind is quite made up to go away immediately." "Is it in anger or in spite that you wish to go?" the King inquired; "seneschal, remain at court, as you have done hitherto, and be assured that I have nothing in the world which I would not give you at once in return for your consent to stay." "Sire," says Kay, "no need of that. I would not accept for each day's pay a measure of fine pure gold." Thereupon, the King in great dismay went off to seek the Queen. "My lady," he says, "you do not know the demand that the seneschal makes of me. He asks me for leave to go away, and says he will no longer stay at court; the reason of this I do not know. But he will do at your request what he will not do for me. Go to him now, my lady dear. Since he will not consent to stay for my sake, pray him to remain on your account, and if need be, fall at his feet, for I should never again be happy if I should lose his company."
