THE SONG OF ROLAND

(La Chanson de Roland)

Is an epic poem probably begun around 1040AD. It is considered one of the most famous chanson de geste a medieval literary form that celebrates noble deeds. The story is set in the time of Charlemagne with Roland being Charlemagne's nephew. Originally this would have been sung to entertain and inspire an audience, and as we enjoy our own bardic evenings around the fire- imagine the scene as these deeds were told ... Many authors have been inspired by the work, including Stephen King in the Dark Tower series.

Charles the King, our Lord and Sovereign,
Full seven years hath sojourned in Spain,
Conquered the land, and won the western main,
Now no fortress against him doth remain,
No city walls are left for him to gain,
Save Sarraguce, that sits on high mountain.
Marsile its King, who feareth not God's name,
Mahumet's man, he invokes Apollin's aid,
Nor wards off ills that shall to him attain.

Bodleian Library, MS Digby 23, Part 2

King Marsilies he lay at Sarraguce,
Went he his way into an orchard cool;
There on a throne he sate, of marble blue,
Round him his men, full twenty thousand,
stood.
Called he forth then his counts, also his
dukes:
"My Lords, give ear to our impending doom:
That Emperour, Charles of France the Douce,
Into this land is come, us to confuse.
I have no host in battle him to prove,
Nor have I strength his forces to undo.
Counsel me then, ye that are wise and true;
Can ye ward off this present death and dule?"
What word to say no pagan of them knew,
Save Blancandrin, of th' Castle of Val
Funde.

Grandes Chroniques de France, St. Petersburg, Ms.
Hermitage. fr. 88
