B&B Corner

To the Populace of the great Barony of Lochmere, your Baron and Baroness send our warmest greetings!

We are slowly and surely working our way through the winter months and can almost conceptualize the warmer months ahead.

Cormacc was able to have a great time at Road to Compostela! Thanks to all who made the event memorable. Next will be Night in Navarre, Crown and On Target. No one can say that Lochmere rests on its Laurels. Or Pelicans. Or any other peer for that matter.

Fighter practice is hosting A&S activities and we would like to see more of you come out and support the efforts of our gifted artisans that are willing to teach. We even learned dance - and if they are able to teach a two left footed Baron, you can learn too!

We are working hard to be prepared for the coming year and look forward to seeing and supporting all of you at events doing the things you like to do.

In service,
Cormacc and Sarra
Baron and Baroness, Lochmere

Elegy VII

Nature's lay idiot, I taught thee to love

By: John Donne

1572–1631

Nature's lay idiot, I taught thee to love,
And in that sophistry, oh, thou dost prove
Too subtle: Fool, thou didst not understand
The mystic language of the eye nor hand:
Nor couldst thou judge the difference of the air
Of sighs, and say, this lies, this sounds despair:
Nor by the eye's water call a malady
Desperately hot, or changing feverously.
I had not taught thee then, the alphabet
Of flowers, how they devicefully being set
And bound up, might with speechless secrecy
Deliver errands mutely, and mutually.
Remember since all thy words used to be
To every suitor, "I, 'if my friends agree";
Since, household charms, thy husband's name to teach,
Were all the love-tricks, that thy wit could reach;
And since, an hour's discourse could scarce have made
One answer in thee, and that ill arrayed
In broken proverbs, and torn sentences.
Thou art not by so many duties his,
That from the world's common having severed thee,
Inlaid thee, neither to be seen, nor see,
As mine: who have with amorous delicacies
Refined thee into a blissful paradise.
Thy graces and good words my creatures be;
I planted knowledge and life's tree in thee,
Which oh, shall strangers taste? Must I alas
Frame and enamel plate, and drink in glass?
Chafe wax for others' seals? break a colt's force
And leave him then, being made a ready horse?
